Loot Crate

A loot crate in a game is a chest containing items of different rarities. When consumed, many loot crates would slide from a roster of items with a needle indicating which item they will receive.

In consuming a loot crate, you will win something of value, but more often than not, the item of value may be lower than what you have spent. Though this has been around for some time, some games have chosen it to be its primary means of progress.

Many people inside gaming communities have labeled this as gambling, while some federal organizations believe that since the item that you receive is not a legitimate fiat, it is not gambling.

In some cases, loot crate items have been on an official level been exchanged for legal fiat, which has allowed federal regulations to protect consumers from this usage, but it has not yet been considered a priority issue.

This however, becomes an issue in games because these systems are implemented for audiences that are underage, which can and has enabled children to spend countless amounts of money.

Chances

Are off of base 2; Junk is 1/2, Common is 1/4, Uncommon is 1/8, Rare is 1/16, and Legendary is the remaining amount.
